If they didn't hire her because she was a Christian, that is one thing and she should win. BUT they criticized her university and what they taught, values opposite to what the company's values are. That's something completely different.

Can we not hire someone whose education consists of an online diploma mill or Trump University, and criticize those institutions as the reason?

Hey Canadians. Bigotry is bigotry is bigotry. You don't get a special dispensation to hate because your target is Christian.

@Jennie Wing Actually they didn't "destroy" it - they absorbed that culture as they did many others.

Depending on the region you have a lot of pagan stuff mixed in with Christianity.

@Jennie Wing Honey, compared to Christians, Vikings were school girls. Nobody was ever burnt at the stake, flayed, impaled, disemboweled (with a pear of anguish), because they didn't believe in Þórr. Only a Christian would come up with such retarded view of history.

Fact: This is the first time ever, in Canada, that a Christian received any kind of legal/charter protections. Are we finally becoming less bigoted against Christians?

@Allahu Snack Bar Fact: Christians have been allowed to perform a genocide on Canada's First Nations based on religious views. And the best part of it? They all got away with it! Even the guy who is now, ah the irony of it all, the chair of the BC Human Rights Tribunal. So, it looks to me like a pretty damn good protection for the Christians!

I bet Ms. Paquette will have a difficult time securing a position or job anywhere, now that she has shown a likelihood of taking matters further if she is not hired. Companies do not need that attitude in their work force.
